Natural resources have the potential to bring wealth and stability to resource-rich developing countries. Too often, corruption and mismanagement of natural resources leads to poverty and conflict. Improving natural resource governance is a crucial first step to ensuring citizens can hold their governments

Article 251, clause 1, and sub-clause “h” talks about investment returns in the mobilization of natural resources. Thus, the 2015 Constitution of Nepal seems to have captured the issue of the governance of natural resources at least from policy perspective. However, how effective it is in its implementation is a big question.
