Performance and Phenomenology | Taylor & Francis Group

The phenomenological tradition focuses on the experience of self and others through dialogue. There is the intentional analysis of everyday life from the person actually experiencing it. The phenomenologist is interested in how people perceive phenomenon ;events and conditions. They stress that no two persons experiences are the same.

The return to religion in contemporary continental philosophy is characterized by a profound sense of intellectual humility. A significant influence within this discussion is Heidegger's anthropology of finitude in Being and Time and his later critiques of onto-theology. These critiques, however, were informed by Heidegger's earlier phenomenology of the lived experience of religious ...
