Samuel Barber's Opus 10 songs are some of his most well-known vocal works. These settings from Chamber Music by James Joyce were published in 1939, but posthumous research by biographer Barbara Heyman and a complete vocal recordings project by Thomas Hampson, Cheryl Studer, and John Browning led to the discovery and recording of ten additional songs, including three more Joyce settings.

"Samuel Barber's Settings of James Joyce's Chamber Music ...

In 1936 and 1937, Samuel Barber set to music six poems by James Joyce. Three of these songs were published in 1939 by G. Schirmer, and was called Three Songs, Op. 10 (1937). Although it is not known whether or not the Irish author ever heard any of Barber's settings of his literature, the composer had an affinity for Joyce's work. Barber composed a song, "Solitary Hotel," in the song cycle ...
