This series is all about engagement. It drew me in, got me thinking and reacting to the paired choice, and then moved me on to the next pair. From the same Edge series as This or That Survival Debate, Axelrod-Contrada provided an engaging 'would you rather' game. Again, this kind of arbitrary choice is just in good fun, and intended to provide an excuse for detailing specific facts about animals.

Other animals do not destroy for wealth, kill because they like it, misuse our resources, and slowly kill our planet. Humans see the other animals as less than, but in reality I think they have a better grasp on humanity than we 'humans' do. We are all animals, some are just better than others, and I don't mean humans.
